

Chippewa Boots hit the runway as the featured footwear at the Fall / Winter Gilded Age Fashion show in New York in early February. Our boots graced the pages of numerous magazines and websites:

GQ.com:

The Vibe for Fall 2011:

When you're going up North—like wayyy North to the Pole, as Gilded Age did this season—you'd better know how to layer. Designer Stefan Miljanic kept his models well-prepared for the harsh conditions in big-ass chunky cardigans and fitted peacoats over plaid shirts. For milder days when the sun's melting ice, he outfitted them with a shearling vest or graphic sweater. And to protect their lower halves from frostbite, his arctic cruisers pulled on wool trousers with sturdy Chippewa boots, like everything else, in neutral, earth-y shades that aren't at all Look at me! The models jumping off the presentation platforms got that job done.

Vogue UK:

LOOK SHARP

LIVE SMART

Fashion Shows

TheFader.com:

Huffington Post.com:

VOGUE.COM

15

16

17

18

19

20

21

22

23

24

25

26

27

28

ANTENNA MAGAZINE

Here are a few sneak peaks from Gilded Age's FW Collection

Relaxed & Masculine with fantastic details. The boots were by Chippewa.

Stumbleupon.com:

THE BRIEF

THE FULL COLLECTION

THE DETAILS

Fall 2011 Gilded Age

Date: February 9, 2011

Location: New York

The Vibe for Fall 2011:

When you're going up North—like wayyy North to the Pole, as Gilded Age did this season—you'd better know how to layer. Designer Stefan Miljanic kept his models well-prepared for the harsh conditions in big-ass chunky cardigans and fitted peacoats over plaid shirts. For milder days when the sun's melting ice, he outfitted them with a shearling vest or graphic sweater. And to protect their lower halves from frostbite, his arctic cruisers pulled on wool trousers with sturdy Chippewa boots, like everything else, in neutral, earth-y shades that aren't at all Look at me! The models jumping off the presentation platforms got that job done.

GQ Europe:

AUTOMNE-HIVER 2011-2012

GILDED AGE

PRÉSENTATION

DÉTAILS

Style.com:

NEW YORK, February 9, 2011

By Matthew Schreier

It's freezing in New York this week, so climbing the stairs to Gilded Age's Fall presentation and finding an arctic inspiration—well, you sympathize. You also, handily enough, want to wear plenty of the clothes. Designer Stefan Miljanich often looks to travel and history to inspire his collections, but occasionally his journeys lead him astray. Last season's South Pacific Spring struck an off note. But Fall's offering, inspired by Admiral Robert Peary's voyages to Greenland and the North Pole, found Miljanich back in fine form. "We wanted to get this sense of expedition that comes across in the layering—having this warm clothing and putting it all together," he explained. "We call it expedition grunge."

see the slideshow >

view full screen >

Between the piled-on styling (courtesy of Jason Rider, and owing a fair bit, perhaps, to Japanese hipster chic) and the younger, cooler casting, there was a freshness to the whole. Styling this aggressive is a gambit; then again, so is a trip to the North Pole. Pull it apart, and there were fine pieces: alpaca hand-knits, distressed leather jackets, and—the label's bread and butter—Japanese selvage denims. Good Admiral Peary would be surprised to find himself inspiring looks like these (though you could walk on an ice floe in those crushing Chippewa hiking boots). But as inspirations go, Miljanich got it right this time.